Press Release

For Immediate Release

Baltimore Freedom Academy's "Student Leadership Week" engaged every student to participate in pre-college activities. It is the size of a small private or parochial high school—every teacher, including CollegeBound's fulltime college access specialist, knows every child.

During the school's Student Leadership Week, students in all three grades toured a college and attended a college/career fair. Freshmen visited Towson University and Morgan State University, while sophomores toured the University of Maryland and juniors traveled to Cheyney University and the University of Pennsylvania.

Everyone at Baltimore Freedom Academy and the CollegeBound Foundation waits with great expectation for next year's first senior class—50 seniors, all with their sights on college. Every senior will be encouraged to pursue a college education and next May we will report to you the college or university where each student has been accepted. Baltimore Freedom Academy's success story is a product of Baltimore City School's high school reform efforts—all stakeholders should take notice of what is possible for our city's youth.
