COLLEGEBOUND RISING SENIORS ATTEND COLLEGE READINESS CONFERENCE AT THE UNIVERSITY OF BALTIMORE

COLLEGEBOUND FOUNDATION

Press Release

Each summer, the CollegeBound Foundation holds a college readiness conference designed to inform soon-to-be high school seniors and their parents about pre-college admission activities and requirements.

This conference is particularly important for students served by CollegeBound's college access program as most of these students will be the first in their family to explore the world of college. During the conference students and parents will be provided college admission information, introduced to financial aid resources and most importantly—learn how to choose the college which is the “best individual fit with an emphasis on public and private colleges and universities in Maryland.”

This conference was hosted by the University of Baltimore and sponsored by the CollegeBound Foundation through funding from a wide range of individual donors, corporations, and foundations supporting CollegeBound's mission to enable Baltimore's youth to pursue a college education.

CollegeBound's success in extending its reach to provide college access opportunities to more underserved children, families and neighborhoods in Baltimore City is singularly connected to the degree in which donors, business leaders, and foundations advocate for and support CollegeBound's important work with inner city youth.
